

Wanted: Navy Chaplains

Navy Chaplains transform lives, offer hope, and serve as religious or spiritual leaders within a unit. There is a higher calling, one that helps better the lives of Sailors, Marines and Coastguardsmen everywhere. They provide strength through faith and can help hold together an entire command in times of crisis or peace.

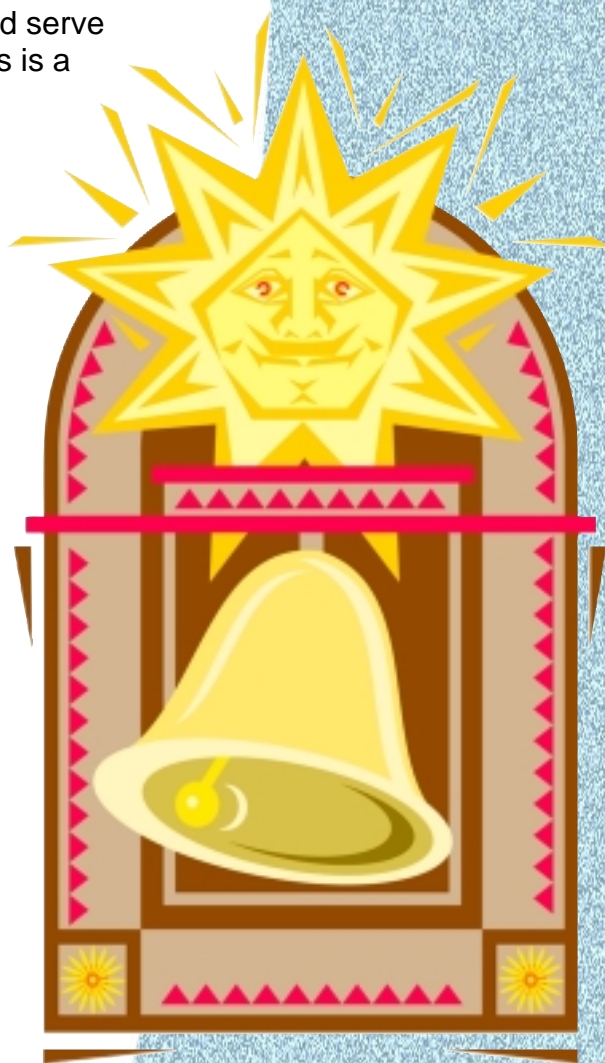

However, Chaplain Corps recruiters have an especially challenging mission as they seek to recruit an even distribution of Navy chaplains from more than 150 recognized denominations.

Applicants for the Navy Chaplain Corps must have earned a Master's of Divinity degree, which is a three-year graduate theological program, and also have completed an additional two years of professional service once the master's degree is earned.

The motivating influence for Chaplain Corps recruiters is a desire to find the finest clergy in America who have a sincere call to minister to young people and a commitment of service to country. A large part of the communication process for Chaplain Corps applicants revolves around men and women of different denominations respecting the overall goal of the Navy chaplain.

The role of a Navy chaplain can be immense in matters affecting morale and the spiritual well being of our service members. There is no better time to join the Navy Chaplain Corps.
